My wife and I are among the majority of thinking Australians who have long realised fossil fuel usage must be curtailed as quickly as possible if the world has a chance of preserving a comfortably habitable environment. The indicators have long been clear that planetary well-being is degenerating through poor world government processes. Fracking activities can never be 100% safe, the quality of groundwater they contaminate never guaranteed, and regardless of where it is consumed any product they generate will exacerbate the rate of environmental degradation. This project, and any like it, should be actively opposed from now on if the young are to have a chance of enjoying a reasonable lifestyle.
